THE PRESS.

TUESDAY, MAY 17
TOSCO, AND THE PITTSBURG CLERKS.

FROM THE ANNALS OF TRAVEL AND MEDICAL HISTORY OF TOSCO.

Some years had elapsed since Mr. Tosco had visited Pittsburgh; when, yielding to the solicitations of an old friend, and former pupil, he had arrangements made for giving a concert there, on a stated night. The boat on which he embarked landed on the wharf of the "city of steel" late in the evening; and getting up early, Mr. Tosco concluded to take a long ramble through the city, to note the changes old time had made since his last visit, before his friend would have time to meet him at the boat. It was a cold frosty morning in February, and, wrapping his heavy blue blanket greatest cloak about him, and drawing his head beneath his hat, he walked on, and he called forth. The hour was so early that he found but one business house open—a music store, kept by an old acquaintance; and as the sound of a violin issued from it, he entered, without hesitation, when the following amusing scene occurred:

"Enter Tosco, and observes two clerks seated on either side of a desk, with a violin preceptor between them, with feet thrown carelessly over the board, and head thrown complacently back. They were industriously sawing out discord on the violin; which they held in this most ungraceful attitude. Tosco passed around the room, examining the instruments, and ever and anon pausing at the side of the self-important clerks, and looking over the notes. He speaks:

"Boys, what you play some good, old funder Dan Tucker, Sitting on a Ball, or something of that kind."
The clerk indignantly—"Humph! we play nothing but scientific music here, sir!" [Discord proceeds some moments. Tosco again advances.]

"Boys, is there no quick time in your book?
I like fast music."
First Clerk—"Now, look here, old fellow; you come in here, do you see, and don't you attend to your horses and wagon, and let us practice our music undisturbed." Tosco—"O, never mind my horses; I tied them fast before I left."

Second Clerk—"You seem to like music, sir." Tosco—"O, yes; very much indeed; but you play so slow! can't you play something for me, faster? I would like to hear you play some quick time."

First Clerk—"I say, old fellow, if you like music so well, and we can't please you, you had just better go and attend to your team now, and come back to-morrow night, to hear a concert; the tickets are only fifty cents apiece, and perhaps he can play the violin to please you."

Tosco—"Tosco! who is this Tosco?" Second Clerk—"O, he is a very great violin player, from Cincinnati; every body is going to hear him to-morrow night." Tosco—"O, then, I shall certainly attend; for I am so very fond of the violin. I play, sometimes, myself."

Second Clerk—"Indeed, if that is the case, will you not play a tune for us?" Tosco—"I don't know; my violin is a very cheap one, and I don't like to play any other First Clerk—"Ha, ha, he is so used to the harsh tones of an old, cracked violin, that he can't play on a good one."

Tosco (smiling)—"I think I'll try to play a piece on yours; but what was that you was playing just now?"
First Clerk—"O, it is called 'The Bayadere,' from the opera of Bayadere." Tosco—"Buy a deer? Ha, ha, well, I never heard of such a name, but I think I play that tune, only I play a great deal more than you do."

First Clerk—"More! why we play every note, but I suppose you learned it of some country hoosier by ear." Tosco—"No, no, I learned it by note; I don't play any other way."

First Clerk—"Well, well, play it for us, and no doubt but we will be immensely edified." Tosco takes the violin and plays. The sweet sounds fill the bewilderment brains of the clerks with ecstasy, astonishment, and awe. Gracefully introducing one beautiful and unchanging style after another throughout the piece, he finally brought it to a close, and with a hearty "Good bye, boys," was about to make his egress into the street, when he was almost overpowered by the loud, whooping, and moment, throw the door open, and down the great violinist in his arms, ejaculating, "How do you, my dear old master? I was on my way to the boat, to meet you; and hearing a violin, I hastened toward it; for I knew no one could play in that way but Tosco!"

The horror-struck clerks gave vent to a series of exclamations. "O, Mr. Tosco, don't, don't, —never tell any one on earth about our secluded blunder. O, we can never forgive ourselves," etc.

FINALE.—The joke was altogether too good to be kept, and before night it had a pretty circulation through the city. Notwithstanding, the young clerks became warm friends of the great master of the bow, and received many valuable lessons from him during his stay, in the divine art of producing sweet sounds, in addition to their first, and never-to-be-forgotten one (which he gave them gratis), that it is exceedingly dangerous to come to hasty conclusions.

If this little anecdote should meet the eye of either of the parties it is hoped it will be read with the same degree of good humor and benevolent spirit with which Mr. Tosco always tells his story of "The Pittsburgh Clerks." EULALIE.

No Railroads or Steamers in Europe in 1814. A celebrated traveler to the New York Ledger says: "In the last number I allude to the great facilities for traveling at the present day in America, compared with the state of things in former times. The difference is as great in Europe as in the United States, although, in reference to the practical arts, an old country might be expected to be far in advance of one so recently settled as the United States. In 1813 there was not a railroad in Europe, with the exception of the tram roads used in connection with the coal-mines, nor was there, if my memory serves me, on any of its waters, salt or fresh, such a thing as a steam vessel of any dimensions, with the exception of a small steamer on the River Clyde. Eight years before that time, the passage from New York to Albany was regularly made by a steamer, and more than ten years before Fulton had made his memorable voyage from New York to Albany in the same way—a slow and tortuous passage, but an era in human affairs—the most important ever made since the voyage of Columbus.

Music and freedom have always gone hand in hand. In ancient Greece and modern Switzerland, the spirit of liberty has been kept alive by song. "The Marseillaise" revolutionized France. The "Ranz des Vaches" awoke national feelings, and the Swiss, in the hills, and native freedom, in the Swiss cantons, in the ranks of Napoleon, that he said in the forbidden it to be sung on pain of death. And then, how sweet the influence of music on the domestic circle! How powerful the attraction it sheds over home! National songs are conservative of freedom, and hymns of praise and prayer are potent guards to guard us from any untoward fate. When was a singing family invaded and desecrated by the tyrant Vice?
When was a singing people enslaved by a foreign despot? Sing and be free. Sing and be happy.—N. Y. Ledger.

In one of the rural towns of Vermont, there lived a man who was accused of stealing sheep, and the day was set when he was to answer the charge before the court of justice. But it so happened, before the day of trial, he sickened and died. His old mother was overwhelmed with grief, and sat long by the corpse filling the house with wailing and lamentation.
One day, however, she was startled by a knock at the door, and, throwing open her door, she saw a stranger standing before her. He was piously ejaculating: "Well, thank God, he's out of the sheep-scorpse any how!"

Various Items.

An Indian, seeking to make proselytes on the same principle which causes little children to cry at night for a bed-fellow—he is afraid of being left alone in the dark.

"Come, don't be proud," said a couple of silly young roysters to two gentlemen; "sit down and make yourselves our equals." "We should have to blow our brains out to do that," replied one of them.

Several graceless fellows have written their names upon the tomb at Mount Vernon. Ah, ye miscreants, the world would rather see your names upon your own tombs than upon Washington's.

An Indiana paper says that a scientific farmer in that State has succeeded in obtaining a grain, seeming to partake equally of the nature of wheat and barley. It must have used a cross grained process.

"Husband, I wish you would buy me some pretty feathers." "Indeed, my dear little wife, you look better without them." "Oh, no, sir, you always call me your little wife, and how does a bird look without feathers?"

"Papa, when are you going to buy me a soldier cap?" "I don't know, my son; I can't afford it just now." "Can't afford it? If you don't hurry it up I'll go and catch the measles, and make you pay for them!"

An African chief wishing to put an end to idolatry in his dominions, issued an edict forbidding any one to worship alligators, the sun, thunder, or other reptiles.

Philosophers say that shutting the eyes makes the sense of hearing more acute. Perhaps this accounts for the habit some people have of always closing their eyes during sermon time.

From the tables of marriage, duration of life, etc., kept by insurance companies and others, it appears that at the age of thirty the probability of a widower's marrying within a year is four times greater than a bachelor's.
The chances in the widower's favor go on increasing from year to year, and at the age of sixty he stands eleven chances to a bachelor's one.

A clerk in an establishment in this city was lately called upon in the course of his duties to do what he considered a dishonest act. Being a conscientious young man, he told his employer that he could not do the thing required, and stated his reasons therefor; he expected to be discharged for so doing, but to his astonishment and gratification his employer, soon after advanced him to a position of great trust and responsibility which commanded a salary nearly double that which he had formerly received.
